This means that we always collect the name, street address, town or city, telephone number and email address of our customers, as well as their VAT and company registration numbers. To enable us to deliver custom work, we may also need to collect certain personal characteristics and preferences from our customers (e.g. age, sex, diplomas or certificates, specialist areas, most frequently used products etc.) and social demographic data (e.g. information about the family). The types of personal data we collect may differ depending on the products and services we supply to our customers. This processing of personal data is necessary for the fulfilment of our contract with our customer and to provide guarantees afterwards (also to end users).

This processing can be classified firstly as a legitimate interest on the part of Clinic6 SPRL, particularly with regard to its ability to keep administrative records and receive payment for the products and services it supplies, and secondly as necessary to satisfy its legal obligation to keep its accounts and fulfil its tax obligations.

Maintaining customer relations

Clinic6 SPRL processes personal data in order to send emails, collect feedback and mailings by post about any products and services provided by us that we believe to be of interest to the recipient.

Sending emails and post to our customers is a legitimate interest and also part of our after sales services, arising from our agreement with the customer. It is in your interest as well as ours that you, as a customer, are duly informed about our activities and new products and/or services.

Collaboration with third parties

When we work with third parties (e.g. suppliers) we will always process their name, address, telephone number, email address, company registration number and bank account number.

This processing is necessary for the fulfilment of the contract between Clinic6 SPRL and the third party.
